Currently, the emphasis is on encouraging people to practice good health hygiene, including washing your hands frequently, covering coughs and sneezes, not touching your face, keep hand sanitizer close, and avoid sick people by staying home. It is important for individuals who exhibit signs or symptoms of the illness to not go out in the community. This includes avoiding work, school, religious services, and other social events while ill. If you have underlying health conditions such as heart disease, diabetes, lung disease, cancer, etc., talk to your doctor now and come up with a plan on what to do if you become sick.
